* Photoshop Elements: Adobe Photoshop Elements offers a basic set of editing tools that are comparable to those in the standard version, but you can use just one image at a time. * Adobe Photoshop: Adobe Photoshop can transform just about any raster image into something that is very different in shape and dimension. Figure 2-3 shows the difference between the standard version of Photoshop and the others. FIGURE 2-3: The standard version of Photoshop and the three that are limited are shown here. Photoshop is undoubtedly the most powerful graphics-editing program in the world. Using it isn't

Developments in the treatment of acute myelogenous leukemia (AML) and the need to maintain long term remission using a cytosine arabinoside-induced complete remission (CR) and consolidation phase post-induction chemotherapy resulted in the development of autologous stem cell transplantation (ASCT) for AML. The major advantage of ASCT is that the preparative regimen is able to both treat and purge AML in the donor as well as potentially the recipient. The toxicity of preparative regimens is mild with significant reduction in the morbidity associated with the procedure. Current preparative regimens for AML include myeloablative irradiation, a variety of myeloablative chemotherapies, including high dose cytosine arabinoside (HD-Ara-C) based regimens and fludarabine monotherapy. These regimens are performed with the intent of achieving a high rate of CR and CR duration as well as increased event-free survival (EFS) and overall survival (OS) for patients with AML. Unfortunately, significant toxicities are encountered with these myeloablative regimens. There are a number of subsets of AML including those with intermediate-high blast counts (ie greater than 10%), those with an unfavorable cytogenetic profile, relapsed AML, and acute promyelocytic leukemia (APL) in both the first and relapse/refractory settings. The identification of those AML subsets has permitted an increase in the intensity and number of patients being entered on clinical trials, which have led to a stepwise increase in the number of patients achieving a CR from 30% in the 1970's to 61% in 1987 and in 2006 to 88% in the UK. However, there are still large numbers of patients who are not being treated. There is a disparity between the number of patients who are being entered on clinical trials compared to those being treated with conventional protocols. A proportion of patients who are treated are failing treatment and do not survive. For this reason, intensification of protocols, including the use of high dose therapy with or without ASCT, is being investigated. ASCT itself is associated with significant morbidity and, until recently, has been a high intensity treatment. However, the introduction of the reduced intensity conditioning (RIC) regimens has allowed a significant proportion of eligible AML patients to undergo successful allogeneic SCT. It is recognized that RIC regimens are less toxic than myeloablative

What's New In?

AP — India's leading mobile phone company, Bharti Airtel has debuted a new app that will allow for users to send 20 million text messages for free on their Android smartphones. The app will be dubbed "Airtel Fresh," will be launched today and will come with a new 50 minute data plan that will allow users to send 20 million text messages a month. It will also come with a feature that allows users to access their mobile data plan without having to recharge or add credit to their mobile phone. “Data is critical to run digital services and apps but most users do not carry a data plan with them. Therefore, we are introducing the latest communication technology available on Android and smartphones to address the issue of limited data mobility. The feature is fully integrated into the mobile network and one can avail the benefits of mobile data without having to recharge or add data to their mobile phone,” said the company in a statement. The app is being positioned as an alternative to the WhatsApp platform, which has been experiencing some serious glitches. The company claims that by the end of this year, Airtel will be charging for using the app, a system that is currently in force in the entire country. The app will be available on Android from today in the country. Users will be able to download the app by going to the App store on their smartphone. Of course, the company will incur some costs in providing this service to its customers. “We are aware that our experience with customers has been that they use more data than anticipated. The 50 GB data per month will be charged for at Rs 100 a month. However, not everyone uses this amount of data. We will continue to monitor usage and engage with customers accordingly,” an Airtel spokesperson said. The company has also made it clear that the service will not have any impact on the current data plans of its customers. While the app is being rolled out in other countries, it is likely that Airtel will target India and Indonesia first.
