Note: In this article, you are looking at a screenshot of the 16.0.1 version of the software; however, the version numbers of a software will not always directly correlate to a particular update due to patching cycles. For example, 17.0 is a patch of 16.0.1, but the 17.0 version of Photoshop became an independent release in 2010, so the image above is for Photoshop CS6 and is from version 13.0. Photoshop is a very complex program. It's a result of the hundreds of man-hours of effort that went into developing, designing, and then evolving it over the course of its near-fifty-year history. Shutterstock.com/Maayan Zalanski. The term "Photoshop" is derived from the first product name ("Photoshop" spelled backwards). At the time Adobe's first commercially successful version of Photoshop, Photoshop CS, was released, the company attempted to capitalize on the popularity of the term. Enter Photoshop Apple launched Photoshop. To many, it was as much a brand name as a product, since it was such a dominate factor in the personal computing industry in those days. Photoshop initially sold for $21,95. At the time, this was double the price of the next best program, the $10,95 AppleSoft Paintbrush. More expensive versions of paintbrush existed, but they had limitations that made them unsuitable for professional image manipulation. The first version was 1.0, released in November 1987. This version included the first true Photoshop. It was originally called the "Paint Shop Pro" and sold for $699. It was a raster-image editor that used a layer system. Shutterstock.com/Bogdan Lukovic. In 1989, the name "Photoshop" was first proposed as a replacement for the Paint Shop Pro. Adobe chose "Photoshop" because it was the first program sold under that name and because it was a known brand. The name Photoshop also reflects the importance of photography in the computer industry in the 1980s. Photographers made up the majority of Adobe's customer base. Adobe released a Photoshop expert referral program, promoting paid specialists to promote the service and show new users the ropes. In 1989, Adobe needed to hire full-time employees just to handle calls from the program. The company released the first Photoshop beta for Windows in 1992.

Let us define $H_t := \int_0^t B_s dB_s$. Prove that for every Wiener process W_t ($N(0,t)$) we have that H_t equals to $\int_0^t \frac{W_s}{s} - \frac{W_{s^2}}{2s^2} ds$. It's easily seen, why this result holds for W_t but not why it holds for B_t . In fact, it does not hold for B_t , since the integral $\int_0^t dB_s$ does not exist.
