1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a device and a method for surgical sub-structures for installing and securing a lifting hook and a retrieval means, including end plates and intermediate plates, around an implant and inserting the implant in the sub-structures. In addition, the invention relates to a device and a method for installing and securing a lifting hook and a retrieval means around and inserting an implant in an implantation site during use of an orthopedic prosthesis. 2. Background Information Many orthopedic prostheses are available that allow for the replacement of an articulating joint such as the hip joint. For example, a hip implant is a known orthopedic prosthesis that replaces part or all of the acetabulum, or hip cup. The hip implant serves to replace the articulating joint between a femoral head and acetabulum, and provides sufficient mobility to ensure that the patient is fully mobile after surgery. Generally, the implantation site is prepared by removing any damaged bone tissue from the acetabulum and the femoral head and then forming a cavity in the prepared bone. The implanted prosthesis requires the use of a lifting means to be lifted from a packaging case to the implantation site and thereafter secured in place. A lifting hook is known to be provided for the purpose of lifting the prosthesis from the packaging case and placing it in the cavity in the prepared bone. The lifting hook is also known to be provided with at least one clip, that may be secured by a user to the implant. The lifting hook is designed to be attached in a quick-release manner to a lifting means, and the user secures the hook to the lifting means once the lifting means has been deployed. A retrieval means is inserted in the cavity in the prepared bone and the implant is inserted into the retrieval means. A retaining means or tape may be attached to a front end of the implant, and the user may attach the lifting means to the retrieval means and insert the implant in the retrieval means and the implant in the implantation site. The lifting hook and retrieval means are released from the implant, and the implant and the hook and retrieval means are removed from the implantation site. The lifting means is also removed from the hook and retrieval means. Assembling the above-discussed known components may be quite cumbersome. The components are held together by the tape, and it is not uncommon that the tape must be removed in order to remove any of the components from the implantation site.
